- ACC will contact you soon to let you know about the next steps in the process.
- If you are still not happy with ACC's review of its decision, you can ask for the decision to be examined by an independent person at a formal review hearing.

If your case goes to a review hearing:

- You may wish to think about what evidence you will give to support your application.
- ACC will notify everyone affected by the review of the date and time of the formal hearing so that everyone has the opportunity to be represented.
- ACC may give relevant information about your case to anyone with an interest in the review who also has the right to speak at the review hearing.
- If you decide later that you don't want to continue with this review, you may withdraw your application. To do this, please call ACC free on 0800 101 996 and ask for a withdrawal form, or send us a letter saying you want to withdraw.

Your choices at a review hearing

If your case goes to a formal review hearing, you have the right to:

- Whanau/Kaumtua or family support at the review hearing.
- Interpreters to translate at the review hearing, if you or your support person(s) need them.
- Where possible, have the hearing at an appropriate community venue.

I would like more information on these options – tick this box and a resolution co-ordinator will contact you if a review hearing is arranged.
